

I believe that the neutrality of the Internet is necessary for fair service in an environment that has very few rules to date. If the principle of net neutrality is thrown out, many already profitable broadband providers would be able to gouge customers for “extra features” that really are no different than features they would have at this very instant. That’s my two-cents anyway.